PREFACE

PART One (French-English) of Harrap's Standard French and English Dictionary, edited by J. E. Mansion, was first published in 1934; Part Two (English-French), in 1939. In the course of those five years Mr Mansion had collected much new material, which, together with the greater extent of the vocabulary of the English language, explains why Part Two of the Dictionary is so much larger than Part One. In 1940 a revised edition of the French-English Part was issued containing as many additions as possible without involving the most costly re-arrangement necessary if the two parts were to be brought into line. We have now incorporated in the French-English section of the Supplement the essential part of the remaining material, as well as many new articles compiled since Mr Mansion's death in 1942, and in consequence this section is substantially larger than the English-French section.

In compiling the Supplement, I had at my disposal:

- (1) A large number of notes left by Mr Mansion.
- (2) The lists of suggested additions supplied in the course of years by many correspondents, who have also solved knotty problems of translation.
- (3) The whole field of modern French and English literature as expressed in books, periodicals, and newspapers.

In spite of our vigilance I am convinced that some recent words and idioms have evaded us and so have been omitted in both languages. Many are so familiar in our everyday language that they are often taken for granted by those whose task it is to keep up to date a work of such magnitude as this Dictionary.

Suggestions and criticism from users of the Dictionary will, therefore, be welcomed by the publishers, all the more so as they intend to publish in a few years' time a completely revised and enlarged edition of this Supplement, which will then become a clearing-house for the more modern words in both languages. This will be the first step towards the publication, in due course, of a completely revised edition of the main work, which will then incorporate those words and expressions which have come to stay.

The plan of the Standard Dictionary has been closely adhered to in the Supplement, and, therefore, it was not necessary to repeat the Table of Phonetic Symbols and the list of Abbreviations used in the Dictionary. The phonetic spelling, although not repeated in the case of words already appearing in the main work, has been given when an entirely new word is included. For the words for which supplementary meanings and explanations are necessary the numbers and classification given refer to the corresponding articles in the main work. Corrections to items appearing in the Standard Dictionary have not been included.

I should like to express my gratitude for the very valuable help given to me by Messrs M. Ferlin, F. Thomas, H. Montet, R. A. Sayce, E. M. Tichern, and G. C. Allen. Special thanks are due to M. M. Ferlin and Dr L. C. Harmer, who read the proofs of this Supplement, and who brought to my notice many omissions and errors that had escaped my attention.

PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION

Since the first Edition of this Supplement appeared in 1950, a large number of additions have been found to be necessary. Many correspondents have accepted my invitation to write to me, and I should like to thank them for their help. The contributions made by Messrs A. Élie, J. Gommy, N. Mayaud, F. G. S. Parker, J. Podgurski, H. T. Porter, E. Thévenot and Dr P. E. Thompson have been the most valuable, in addition to those of Messrs M. Ferlin, H. Montet, R. A. Sayce, E. M. Trehern, already mentioned in the preface to the First Edition. The proofs have been read this time again by M. M. Ferlin and Professor L. C. Harmer, who have as on the first occasion brought to my notice many omissions and errors that had escaped my attention.

PREFACE TO THE THIRD EDITION

In the course of the revision of Harlap's Standard French and English Dictionary it has become more and more obvious that many recent additions to the French and English languages should be made available (with their translations) as soon as is possible to users of the dictionary. It is for this reason that this very considerably enlarged supplement is now issued.

In addition to the contributors already mentioned in the two previous prefaces, we should like to thank for their help Mrs M. Davidson, Messrs D. Fortin, Ch. Arnaud le Foulon, Papineau-Couture, F. C. Townsend, and J. Watson. In order to keep pace with the latest developments in the field of phonetics, both in English and in French, a revised phonetic transcription, explained in the Representation of the Pronunciation, has been adopted for each part. The phonetics of new French words have been supplied by M. B. Quemada, and of new English words by Mr J. D. O'Connor.

We should also like to acknowledge the considerable assistance afforded us by the following works:

Dictionnaire alphabétique et analogique de la langue française. P. ROBERT. Société du nouveau Littre. Grand Larousse Encyclopédique.

Petit Larousse.

Dictionnaire usuel Quillet-Flammarion.

Webster's New International Dictionary (Supplement).

and many Technical Dictionaries.

The proofs have been read by M. M. Ferlin, Professor L. C. Harmer and Messrs F. G. S. Parker and J. Watson, who have brought to our notice many omissions and imperfections that had escaped our attention.

REPRESENTATION OF THE PRONUNCIATION

The symbols used are those of the Association Phonétique Internationale. A few points call for special mention.

1. While this notation is on the whole adequate to the representation of French sounds, it suffers from the lack of a symbol for a middle e, less open than [ɛ] in père, not so close as [e] in domé, and commonly heard in the unstressed syllables: aterrir, saisir, régner, réglable, fièvre. (The accents afford no guide to the pronunciation; e has the same sound in je mènerai and je céderai, in avènement and événement.) This intermediate e has been transliterated by [e] or [ɛ] according to common practice, but there appears to be a growing tendency to open the unstressed e, especially before [a], [ɑ], or [ũ] (though not perhaps in the cases of prefixes such as dé- or mé-), and the symbol [ɛ] has been used as perhaps more nearly accurate than [e] in words such as assèchement, pondération, opération. On the other hand, when the intermediate e precedes stresses [e], [i], or [y] it tends to be closer in pronunciation to [e] (as for example in fêter, mairie, and vêtu) and in such cases it is this symbol which has been used. The reader will however bear in mind that in each case no more than a middle e is implied.

2. The ending -assion, -ation has generally been transliterated by [asjɔ̃], though in certain words standard French now requires [asjɔ̃].

3. For the ending -aille the pronunciations [aj] and [a:j] are both current, perhaps with a difference. In the following pages it is rendered by [aj] as a rule, but by [a:j] when pejorative. Exceptions to this are paille, maille and the verbal forms railler, bâiller, which, though neither popular forms nor pejorative, are pronounced with [a:j].

4. The half-length sign [·] has only been used to denote a half-lengthening within a phonetic group: for instance passe-lacet [pa·sɛs], pare-choc [pa·ʁʃɔk], as opposed to passee [pa:s] and pare [pa:r].

5. The pronunciation of unvoiced final r and l after a consonant has here been given as [r̥] and [l̥] (for example, table, mètre) as is usual in contemporary French phonetic transcription.

6. The stress is not indicated in the French-English part. It may be assumed to fall, however slightly, on the last sounded syllable of the word, when the latter is considered apart from a word-group.
